

Who we are

When you're affected by cancer, having the right kind of information and support, at the right time, is essential. The Macmillan Cancer Information and Support Service at the City Hospital campus of Nottingham University Hospitals NHS Trust provides a confidential, drop-in service for anyone affected by cancer. This includes people who:

- require information about cancer
- have been diagnosed with cancer
- have survived cancer
- are looking to reduce the risks of cancer
- are a carer, relative, or friend of someone with cancer
- are healthcare professionals.

How we can help

Staffed by a Macmillan Information Nurse and trained volunteers, we are able to provide:

- literature on all aspects of living with cancer
- internet access to guide people to appropriate information resources
- the opportunity to discuss treatments, side effects and other cancer related issues
- a private room to talk to someone in confidence
- information and support over the phone for those not able to access the service in person.

We also offer

- links to local and national support services
- signpost people to self help and support groups
- links to other voluntary and statutory agencies
- links to self help and support groups
- access to benefits advice
- advice recommended by your medical team (information prescription)
- cancer information in large print, audio format and some languages other than English.
